

Home > / Universal Design

Personalisation Goals

Incorporating opportunities for choice and the expression of individual preferences.

Everyone is different, and providing people with options can influence how comfortable they feel using a space. Having the ability to personalise the facilities allows people to make adjustments to suit their own needs.

Examples include being able to move seating around in public spaces, and having adjustable office furniture and equipment to cater for individual dimensions.

This desk can be adjusted for personal use while sitting or standing. Everybody works differently, so it's important that office spaces are flexible to accommodate for individual working preferences.

